"FIRST YEAR" IS JOVIAL COMEDY

Little Difficulties of Newly-Weds Frowns Amusement at Empire

"The First Year," a comedy by Frank Craven, at the Empire Theatre for the first three days of this week. "The First Year" is a comedy dealing with the first year of married life of a young couple—very young couple who have been married for many years claim that the first year of wedded bliss is the most difficult of a young couple to negotiate, and if they successfully weather the multitudinous vicissitudes which will come into the way that is theirs by tradition, it is to be sincerely hoped that such is the case.

In this very amusing and a couple set out on the road to happiness, and in their first year of married life, they encounter many setbacks and little troubles. The play is beautifully written and well acted, and the characters are so well drawn that the audience will find it a thoroughly simple and yet are refreshingly charming. The situations are all so natural, and the dialogue is so good, that the audience will find it a thoroughly simple and yet are refreshingly charming.

Wholesome Play
Gales of laughter swept over the vast Empire audience, last night, and long before the end of the first act was reached, many were stimulated from the amount of energy expended in laughing.
